四、閱讀測驗

Venice is one of Europe's greatest cities. In fact, it is so popular that it hosts approximately 19 million tourists annually. Visitors are attracted to the city's romantic atmosphere, world-class art, and legendary food.

One of the best ways to explore the city is on foot. While most cities have a number of must-see sites that attract tourists, in Venice the city itself is the attraction. Travelers walk down narrow streets, admire the beauty around them and soak up the ambiance of their surroundings. While walking along the narrow streets is fun, it's even easier to get around by using the city's many canals. Venice is famous for its canals and the numerous bridges that cross them.

Though not famous for its nightlife, Venice has much to offer in terms of the performing arts. You'll find the city has concerts, operas, plays and ballets being performed almost every night. Most of the performances are held in churches, with a range of international artists participating.

For food, culture and fun, Venice is the place to be!

Linsey Knerl doesn't get out much anymore. A free-lance copywriter and mother of four from Tekamah, Neb., Knerl has cut back on trips to the movie theaters and restaurants as well as days at the zoo with her kids. Fun is now a DVD from Netflix or a family board-game night. She cooks at home most evenings and has hoarded six months' worth of meat in her freezer to reduce trips to the grocery store and save gas money. "We made a conscious decision that we couldn't go out to eat two or three times a week anymore," says Knerl, whose husband stays home to help raise their kids.

Start stockpiling your canned goods, America. We're quickly becoming a country of cocooners, to borrow a term that retail analysts use to describe consumers who nest at home to shave expenses. It's a profound reversal of the consumption habits that helped fuel the economic crisis in the first place. "It's about getting back to basics," says cocooner Stan McClain, who owns a studio-supplies store in Burbank, Calif., and has drastically cut back his restaurant spending and tore up his driveway to turn it into a vegetable garden. "By going backward, you can actually go forward responsibly."

36. What's the main idea of the passage?

- (A) Most Americans seem to have enjoyed leading a simple life now.
- (B) Americans still believe that living well is the best revenge.
- (C) A lot of US consumers are trying to hunker down to shed expenses.
- (D) Americans should buy more items produced in the US.

37. Why does Linsey Knerl stockpile huge amount of meat in her freezer?

- (A) She wants to spend more time on her work and taking good care of her children.
- (B) The trips to the grocery stores are too bothersome for her.
- (C) She doesn't have to drive so often that she can spend less on gasoline.
- (D) The refrigerator she has is large enough to store much meat.

38. Which of the following statements is true?

- (A) Linsey and her family used to eat out more than twice every week.
- (B) Americans' consumption habits have positively contributed to the US economy.
- (C) Linsey's husband enjoys taking care of the kids and house chore.
- (D) Americans buy a lot of canned goods in the face of economic recession.

39. Which of the following statements about Stan McClain is true?

- (A) He planned to sell his store in Burbank in California.
- (B) He sold his car and drove no more.
- (C) He grew and sold his vegetables to restaurants.
- (D) He grew vegetables in his driveway-turned garden.

40. As cocooners, in what way are Linsey Knerl and Stan McClain in common?

- (A) They both try very hard to lead a simple life in order to protect the environment.
- (B) They don't go out as often as they used to in order to reduce unnecessary spending.
- (C) They have to lead a frugal life in the face of global financial tsunami.
- (D) They can tide over the economic crisis by going backward and forward responsibly.
